Endor reported that Fanatec product sales were approximately $110 million for 2023 (unaudited).

"We have been a fan of the Fanatec brand for years, and I am thrilled that we were finally chosen to be the next home for Fanatec products. We intend to use our extensive supply chain and logistics network to reduce operating costs, enhance users' customer service experience, increase sales opportunities, and help the business return to profitability," said Andy Paul, CEO of Corsair. "We intend to maintain the core business in Landshut while expanding its position as a world-class product development center for Sim Racing products. With a strong two-decade legacy, Fanatec is recognized as a pioneer and a mainstay for racing enthusiasts across the globe, and we look forward to building on that heritage as we leverage Corsair's long track record of product innovation and customer experience leadership."

Fanatec has seen significant growth over the last five years in part due to the growth in on-track racing interest, as the swelling global popularity of motorsports has translated into an increased popularity for Sim Racing. Industry reports estimate the Sim Racing components market at approximately $1 billion, with an expected 20 percent annual growth rate.

Following on Corsair's recent announcement of entering into this exciting market with its revolutionary Sim Racing chassis, today's announcement immediately enhances and expands Corsair's product breadth, uniquely positioning the Company as a leading Sim Racing end-to-end product solution. Corsair existing product lines, such as Gaming PCs, Components to build Gaming PCs, Gaming and Streaming Peripherals, and Monitors are all products that can be used when building a complete Sim Racing Rig.

CORSAIR plans to make significant investments in the Fanatec brand, its products, and increasing worldwide availability through our channels. All current and future Fanatec customers will benefit from the world-class support from CORSAIR, including warranty and software updates going forward.
